- (a) Contemplative learning in Buddhism;
 - (b) Autobiography paper guided by Buddhist teachings;
 - (c) Buddhist homiletics; or
 - (d) Buddhist counselling case study.

Title of the capstone experience project shall be submitted for approval by January 15 of the final academic year in which the curriculum ends and the project output shall be presented by July 31 of the same year. Candidates shall submit a statement that the project output represents their own work undertaken after registration as candidates for the degree.

Assessment

MBC 9.

- (a) Grades shall be awarded in accordance with TPG 9(a) of the Regulations for Taught Postgraduate Curricula. Only passed courses will earn credits.
- (b) Where so prescribed in the syllabuses, coursework shall constitute part or whole of the assessment for one or more courses.
- (c) An assessment of candidates' coursework during their studies may be taken into account in determining their result in each written examination paper; or, where so prescribed in the syllabuses, may constitute part or whole of the assessment of one or more courses.
- (d) There shall be no appeal against the results of examinations and all other forms of assessment.

MBC 10. Candidates who have failed to satisfy the examiners on their first attempt in not more than two courses to be examined, whether by means of written examination papers or coursework assessment, during any of the academic year of study, may be permitted

- (a) to present themselves for re-examination in the course or courses of failure, with or without repeating any part of the curriculum, on a specified date; or
- (b) to re-submit their work for the course or courses of failure for re-assessment within a specified period, but no later than the end of the following semester (not including the summer semester); or
- (c) for elective courses, to take another course in lieu and satisfy the assessment requirements.

MBC 11. Subject to the provisions of Regulation MBC 8, candidates who have failed to present a satisfactory output in the capstone experience project may be permitted to submit a new or revised project output within a specified period.

Supplementary examination

MBC 12. Candidates who are unable because of illness to be present for one or more papers in any written examination may apply for permission to present themselves at a supplementary examination to be held before the beginning of the following academic year. Any such application shall be made on a form prescribed within two weeks of the first day of the candidates' absence from the examination.

Discontinuation of studies

MBC 13. Candidates who

- (a) are not permitted to present themselves for re-examination/re-submission in any written examination or coursework assessment in which they have failed to satisfy the examiners or to revise and re-present their project outputs in the capstone experience; or
- (b) have failed to satisfy the examiners on second attempt in any coursework assessment or examination or in their project outputs in the capstone experience; or
- (c) have failed more than two courses on the first attempt in an academic year; or
- (d) have exceeded the maximum period of registration as specified in MBC 6

may be required to discontinue their studies under the provisions of General Regulation G 12.

Assessment results

MBC 14. On successful completion of the curriculum, candidates who have shown exceptional merit may be awarded a mark of distinction, and this mark shall be recorded in the candidates' degree diplomas.

SYLLABUSES FOR THE DEGREE OF MASTER OF BUDDHIST COUNSELLING

1. PURPOSE

The programme aims at providing students with the fundamental knowledge and skills required for Buddhist teaching-based counselling. Its purpose is to lay a stronger foundation to serve the society at large by professionally training Buddhist chaplains to offer Buddhist counselling services. The programme offers an interdisciplinary curriculum that focuses on the study of a variety of applied Buddhist and psychological knowledge while simultaneously cultivating students' spiritual formation. During each course, students will be encouraged to develop knowledge of, skills for, and experiences in a given subject and apply them in a contemporary psychosocial environment.

2. CURRICULUM DURATION

The curriculum shall normally extend over one academic year of full-time study or two academic years of part-time study.

3. CURRICULUM STRUCTURE

All courses are offered on a credit basis. Candidates must complete eight courses by selecting three compulsory core courses, four elective courses, and one course for capstone experience. Candidates have to complete a total of 63 credits for graduation.

1. Core Courses (9 credits each)

- BSTC7600. Theories and practice in Buddhist counselling I
- BSTC7601. Theories and practice in Buddhist counselling II
- BSTC7602. Spiritual formation through contemplative practices

2. Elective Courses (6 credits each)

- BSTC7603. Dharma therapy
- BSTC7604. Awareness training program
- BSTC7605. Being with the elderly, sick and dying
- BSTC7606. Buddhist homiletics: The art of presenting Buddhist teachings
- BSTC7607. Buddhist liturgy and rituals
- BSTC7608. Buddhist meditation
- BSTC7609. Special topics in Buddhist counselling (1)
- BSTC7610. Special topics in Buddhist counselling (2)

3. Capstone Experience (12 credits)

- BSTC8998. Capstone Experience

Not all elective courses listed above will necessarily be offered each year.

Students from the MBC programme will be provided with options to select elective courses from the Master of Social Sciences (Counselling) programme. Teachers from the Master of Social Sciences (Counselling) programme may also serve as the co-supervisor in the Capstone Experience if the area of study is relevant. The selection of cross-listed courses and co-supervision of Capstone Experience should be subject to the approval of the Programme Director/Chairman of the two respective programmes. Please contact the MBC Programme Office for details.

4. SYLLABUSES

A. Core Courses

BSTC7600. Theories and practice in Buddhist counselling I (9 credits)

This course provides students with basic knowledge and experiences in Buddhist teachings-based counselling and helping skills. Using fundamental Buddhist teachings such as the Four Noble Truths, Noble Eightfold Path, Dependently Co-arising, and Non-Self as framework, students will be introduced to the Buddhist understandings of human nature and suffering. Theories and practices of classical counselling interventions and practices will also be introduced so that students can see the similarities and differences between Western psychotherapy and Buddhist counselling. Through lectures, class discussions, role playing, and other experiential learning activities, students will acquire a wide range of Buddhist counselling skills, such as compassionate engagement within therapeutic relationships, deep listening, reflection of meanings, and development of insight. Based on the ethical standards of the Association of Professional Chaplains and the Buddhist ethics, this course also introduces students to ethical decision making including an awareness of ethical issues, knowledge about what constitutes an ethical dilemma, and an understanding of the steps to take when one encounters an ethical dilemma.

Assessment: 80% coursework and 20% examination

BSTC7601. Theories and practice in Buddhist counselling II (9 credits)

This course is designed to expand students' knowledge and experience in Buddhist counselling and helping skills by focusing on specific treatment models. Guided by evidenced-based practices in professional psychology and Buddhism, this course introduces students to traditional therapeutic orientations, including cognitive behavioral therapy, client-centered therapy, and personal recovery-oriented approaches as well as Buddhist-derived treatments, including meditation awareness training (MAT), compassion cultivation training (CCT), dharma therapy, awareness training program (ATP), and others. This course is particularly focused on the application of Buddhist-derived treatments in the counselling process. The model of teaching will include lectures, role playing, video demonstrations, and contemplative exercises to help students increase their readiness in utilizing advanced counselling techniques, such as loving-kindness meditation, self- and other-focused compassion, and guiding clients to self-reflect.

Pre-requisite: BSTC7600. Theories and practice in Buddhist counselling I

Assessment: 80% coursework and 20% examination

BSTC7602. Spiritual formation through contemplative practices (9 credits)

Across the fields of professional psychology and chaplaincy, both the Society for the Psychology of Religion and Spirituality of the American Psychological Association and the Association of Professional Chaplains emphasize the importance of spirituality in human psychology, promote the incorporation of spirituality into clinical settings in accordance with academic research, and foster constructive dialogue between psychology and religion. In alignment with these organizations' support of the importance of the spiritual quality of Buddhist counsellors, this course aims to cultivate the necessary spiritual competencies required for professional spiritual care through an introspective approach in which students deepen their personal practice and hone their approach to Buddhist counselling. In particular, students will have a deeper awareness of their attachments, gain insight into the relationship between their spiritual well-being and defilements, cultivate loving kindness and compassion for self and others, and foster their skillful means through Buddhist practices such as precepts study and meditation. The model of teaching for this course will include lectures, group discussions, and contemplative exercises.

Assessment: 80% coursework and 20% examination

B. Elective Courses

BSTC7603. Dharma therapy (6 credits)

Dharma therapy is a therapeutic intervention modelled after the Buddha's path to awakening. Its theoretic foundation is built on the Buddhist dharma, the core of Buddhist teachings, together with mindfulness as one of its key components. This course will introduce the theory and structure of the therapy and how these Buddhist interventions to end suffering can be applied in a psychotherapeutic manner by enabling practitioners to better understand their problems in a more realistic and constructive manner.

Pre-requisite: BSTC7600. Theories and practice in Buddhist counselling I

Assessment: 100% coursework

BSTC7604. Awareness training program (6 credits)

This is an experiential as well as theoretical course that covers the latest research and theories regarding Buddhist-derived interventions. The main aim of the course is to provide students with knowledge and understanding of the awareness training program, a Mahayana Buddhist teaching-based group intervention for enhancing the ability of participants to handle stress and fostering well-being. Students will participate in introspective exercises, experiential activities, meditation practices, group discussions, and quizzes based on the 7-week awareness training program. They are expected to deepen their experience through home practice and apply their experience to counselling services and their daily lives.

Assessment: 100% coursework

BSTC7605. Being with the elderly, sick and dying (6 credits)

What are prominent psychological reactions in the midst of pain and suffering? What is a "good death"? Regarding caregivers, what are helpful responses and what are not? What are healing practices that bring pleasure to both parties? This course offers a Buddhist perspective of the psychology of perception, emotions, and thoughts in response to illness and incapacity, particularly at the end of life. All aspects of dying—the medical, legal, emotional, intellectual, and spiritual—require discussion. The course also aims to provide training that conveys thoughtfulness in interacting with patients, their family, and health care staff in a multi-faith setting. The course comprises lectures, small-group discussions, class exercises, role playing, and seminars on selected topics. Students are expected to perform their own research on basic medical knowledge, such as the symptoms, treatments, and prognosis of serious illnesses. Therefore, they are required to listen well and having an understanding of details.

Assessment: 100% coursework

BSTC7606. Buddhist homiletics: The art of presenting Buddhist teachings (6 credits)

Buddhism has come a long way since the Buddha first turned the wheel of Dharma in Barnes, India, more than 2,500 years ago. This course will examine how Buddhism has evolved and adopted itself to suit the needs, customs, and temperament of different people in different lands. The relevancy of Buddhism in our time and how to promote it in light of today's social, educational, and political environments will also be explored. Various styles and types of dharma talks are studied and considered. Over the course of interactive sessions, students will hone their skills in preparing and delivering mindful, focused, and inspirational presentations on Buddhist teachings. Each student will be video-recorded delivering a brief speech, followed by a question and answer session and a supportive feedback session.

Assessment: 100% coursework

BSTC7607. Buddhist liturgy and rituals (6 credits)

Although many claim (based on a selective reading of canonical Buddhist literature) that the Buddha's "original teaching" involved a rejection of ritual activity, from the very early period and throughout the entire Buddhist history, the Buddhist traditions have adopted indigenous rituals and practices and have devised a great variety of their own rituals. This course provides an introduction to Buddhist ritual practice in different Buddhist tradition to the students who are interested in Buddhist studies. We will begin by exploring several theories and research methods of adopting rituals in anthropology and religious studies. After having grasped the theoretical basis of ritual studies, the students will go further to study the doctrinal, mythic, and other dimensions of Buddhist practice, identify the various sources of ritual power, examine the structural patterns of various rituals, survey the different categories of ceremonies, and analyse the most important groups of rituals, especially different death rituals that are performed to assist the deceased to enable rebirth into the better realms. It will focus on how experiences of ritual site and ritual time will generate meanings that affect individual enlightenment as well as the understanding of Buddhist teaching. As a comparative approach to Buddhist rituals, this course will cover materials such as myths, texts, and video records of rituals. Rituals are studied in some detail by reading ritual texts and conducting fieldwork (or studying rituals by watching video recordings of them) to examine the actual ritual practice.

Assessment: 100% coursework

BSTC7608. Buddhist mediation (6 credits)

By integrating the techniques of solution-focused brief therapy and the mediation process with Buddhist theories and practices, the course will teach a model of conflict resolution that reflects the Mahayana ideal of the practice of the Way of Bodhichitta for benefiting oneself and others, to resolve conflicts for oneself and for others, and to learn about the process of change and transformation through applications of the model. Students will acquire basic knowledge of theories and practices of Buddhism and mediation using an integral approach and will apply the appropriate skills to be their own mediator and to mediate other people's disputes in the family context such as for couples and parents and children, in the care of the elderly/sick, and in the probate of a deceased member of the family. The mode of teaching will be by lecture, demonstration by recordings or role plays, role play exercises in small groups, and self-reflective learning.

Assessment: 100% coursework

BSTC7609. Special topics in Buddhist counselling (1) (6 credits)

This course is offered from time to time. Students should consult the Centre of Buddhist Studies on the content of the course on offer.

Assessment: 100% coursework

BSTC7610. Special topics in Buddhist counselling (2) (6 credits)

This course is offered from time to time. Students should consult the Centre of Buddhist Studies on the content of the course on offer.

Assessment: 100% coursework

C. Capstone Experience

BSTC8998. Capstone Experience (12 credits)

The capstone experience is designed to demonstrate student's competencies as a Buddhist counsellor while participating in a single original project of the student's choice with a faculty member's supervision. This project will be a comprehensive and synthesizing endeavor to apply the knowledge and skills learned during the courses to self and/or others. In particular, students should demonstrate their advancement in Buddhist knowledge, application of Buddhist counselling skills, adherence to Buddhist values, acquisition of communication skills, and enhancement of self-awareness through one of the following capstone options. All options offered will enhance students' integration of Buddhist knowledge, application of Buddhist counselling skills to self and/or others, understanding of important Buddhist values, written and/or oral communication skills, and demonstration of self-awareness. The title of the project output shall be submitted for approval by January 15 of the final academic year in which the curriculum ends and the project output shall be presented by July 31 of the same year.

Option A: Contemplative learning in Buddhism

Contemplative learning and experience is an important part of Buddhist practices both as a means to develop spiritual and religious competency and to acquire the necessary knowledge and experience to assist and provide counselling to clients. There are various forms of Buddhist contemplative practices varying from meditation retreat to more ritualist ceremonies such as Shuilu Fahui (the Buddhist Rite for Deliverance of Creatures of Water and Land). Spiritual and religious cultural competencies in understanding and providing Buddhist rituals as contemplative experiences and forms of professional spiritual care are crucial in the training of Buddhist counselling.

This application of contemplative practices is also an indication of whether students can integrate Buddhist knowledge, practices, history, traditions, and rituals into their learning experience as well as applying them as counselling tools to help others. With approval from faculty and supervisors, students will participate in one of the contemplative practices in Buddhism, such as Buddhist meditation retreats, repentance rituals, or other practices and liturgy. In a 6,000- to 8,000-word paper, students will: (1) describe the contemplative practice in detail; (2) explain the significance of the practice with in-depth analysis of the Buddhist teachings, traditions, and values embedded in the practice; and (3) articulate their learning and personal growth, self-awareness and spiritual formation, and demonstrate reflexive learning in relation to the Buddhist practice. Students will be required to use academic resources such as research studies and Buddhist scriptures to support their analysis of the Buddhist practices.

Assessment: 100% coursework

Option B: Autobiography paper guided by Buddhist teachings

Self-awareness is a crucial component in Buddhist counselling. It is a necessary component in self-cultivation that the knowledge to oneself such as seeing one's attachments, noting mental proliferations which lead to the notion of self, and knowing conditions contributing to suffering are essential to the practice of Buddhism. When counsellors attain these skilful qualities of mind, they become more effective in helping their clients learn to rectify their own skilful qualities. One of the most common ways for counsellors to enhance their level of self-awareness is the ongoing process of self-understanding and self-reflection through contemplative exercises and in-depth self-reflection. Due to these very reasons, Buddhist counselling students will apply Buddhist teachings to yield self-awareness and self-understanding through an autobiography paper. In a 6,000- to 8,000-word paper, students will conduct an analysis of their dukkha, delineate how different conditions and attachments give rise to the dukkha, and describe the process of applying Buddhist teachings and practices to alleviate their own suffering. For example, students can describe insights regarding their attachments to the five aggregates, how their defilements impair their daily life, and how a consistent meditation practice helps them diminish suffering. A general assumption is that the efficacy of a Buddhist counsellor is directly proportionate to one's level of self-cultivation which has to be attained through the advancement in self-awareness. Therefore, the goal of this capstone project is to help students reflect on how they have incorporated all the learning materials in the MBC programme into their personal and professional growth as an emerging Buddhist counsellor.

Assessment: 100% coursework

Option C: Buddhist homiletics

In the history of Buddhism, the Buddha and his disciplines used homiletics as a way of counselling to help people reduce suffering through the learning and practices of Buddhist teachings. Buddhist homiletics comprises the study of the composition and delivery of a specific Buddhist topic which requires advanced Buddhist knowledge, application of the Buddhist concepts into a healing tool through the didactics, innovative translations of the Buddhist values into a specific context for the audiences, strong communication skills, and high level of self-awareness on the students' roles as a presenter. Students will deliver one session of discourse on a specific topic in Buddhism to a target audience. In other words, students need to summarize what they have learnt in the programme and prepare a pragmatic discourse on a chosen topic with an accurate understanding of Buddhist teachings. Working closely with the supervisor and their colleagues, students will identify their particular styles and methods to help them with their own homiletic work as well as the target audience. Students will write the presentation, give the presentation in an approved setting, video-record the presentation, and collect feedback from the audience in a written format. The deliverable of this capstone experience will be a portfolio consisting of: (1) a reflection paper (less than 2,000 words) about the experiences informed by audience feedback; (2) the written form of the presentation; (3) completed feedback forms from the audience; and (4) video-recording of the presentation. This capstone project involves strong skills in writing dharma talks and advanced communication skills. Students choosing this option are required to take Buddhist Homiletics: The Art of Presenting Buddhist Teachings as one of the elective courses.

Assessment: 100% coursework

Option D: Buddhist counselling case study

Students who have been practicing as a helping professional (e.g., psychologists, social workers, counsellors, etc.) can apply knowledge learned from the curriculum to conduct a preliminary case study of a client. In a 6,000- to 8,000-word paper, students will use a Buddhist perspective to conceptualize the client's psychological disturbances, describe the application of Buddhist counselling skills and responses of the client, and reflect on the process of counselling. To protect the client's confidentiality, all identifying information of the project should be removed.

Assessment: 100% coursework
